Republicans Win Vote at School Here

The "Republicans" won the presidency of the United States Friday in an election held Friday in Torrance. In a mock political convention at Riviera School eighth graders caucused, nominated, and elected John Eubanks as president, together with Jerry Bottomley as vice president. The convention was part of a month-long course in political science being studied at the school by the two eighth grade classes. Students also elected members of Congress, who will introduce bills, debate, and act upon legislation. President Eubanks will appoint his cabinet this week and also will deliver a state of the union message and hold press conferences. Students will go through all the motions of the national government. The "Democrats" and "Republicans" held their conventions Wednesday, each sporting its symbol—a donkey and an elephant. After nominees were picked, the winners were chosen by students, who cast their ballots in the conventional voting booths. Adults who wish to visit the model congress may obtain tickets to sit in the galleries.
